He was lucky to get Sessions, as shitty as that sounds. Working for his administration was considered political suicide, if you don't remember.

Plus McConnell and Graham were pissed when a Democrat won the special election for Sessions' seat, so they wouldn't let the President fire Sessions when he wanted to. He was stuck with his inaction until they indicated they would be willing to confirm a new AG.

Barr was a wild card and he ended up not panning out. Unfortunately. He had a chance to be a historical figure and instead he chose to be a footnote.

The swamp runs deep and is much vaster than many of us realize. I'm no longer sure it can be drained, I think we just need to nuke it from orbit and then fill in the hole left behind and start over.

– HisWillBeDone 2 points 8 days ago +2 / -0 (edited)

Jesus said if you are struck on the right cheek, turn the other also. His admonition carried a lot of cultural nuance that has been lost to us unless you look into it.

Striking someone backhanded was considered an insult to someone you think of as a social lesser, while striking someone open-handed was an invitation to a social equal to engage in a fistfight. The left hand was considered unclean, and to backhand someone with your left hand would shame you more than it would them.

When you put this together, you get a modern translation more along the lines of, "If someone violently disrespects you in a legal way, do not retaliate with violence of your own. Exhibit loving but stern defiance by forcing them to acknowledge you as an equal."

edit: The entire Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5) deserves its own lecture that I'm unqualified to give. It's a very important instructional on bending to unjust authority without kneeling to it.

Anaconda said that many months ago repeatedly, and as I recall, many or most people argued against him, including me (but he came with at least somewhat good sources for his claims, and that confused me, and I acknowledged that his sources were at least somewhat good as I recall). I recall him getting lots and lots of downvotes.

Trump personally did beat coronavirus though. His elderly and overweight immune system was more than a match for the Kung Flu.

'We', on a meta level, have yet to beat Wu Flu.

It's not just an election, its the casualness and smugness with which the entire foundation of a democracy has been dismissed. Either laws and the constitution have meaning, or they don't. If they do, fucking enforce them. If they don't, then its time for We The People to tear down the clownshow masquerading as our government and enact a new one - one that puts this country's citizens and their rights above all others

TDS cucks:

My boyfriend works in downtown DC and his employer is having employees work from home tomorrow. Everyone is scared of tomorrow getting violent.

BLM/antifa riots? Employees still had to show up to the office. Nobody cared about actual burning, looting, and murdering.

Idiots.

But when a few trump cars followed the Hobama bus and chased them out of town, it was a scary show of white supremacy.

Fucking idiots

Without revealing my age...I used to drive to work listening to Howard Stern in the morning. Trump was an occasional guest. It was always interesting to listen to him. But I was pretty neutral about him. Never once on one of my early morning drives did I imagine that I would have such immense respect and actual love for this guy. MAGA
